cryptographically protecting the data;

sending the cryptographically protected data to the client; and under control of the program portion, converting the cryptographically protected data to an unprotected form and selectively controlling access to copy or save functions at the client in respect of the data in its unprotected form.